Immigration Service publishes new report on the socio-economic situation in Syria

The Immigration Service published a new report on the socio-economic situation in Syria. It is based on a wide range of sources, including UN agencies, international humanitarian organisations, research and analytical institutions, and national country of origin information (COI) units.

The report examines the current socio-economic situation in Syria, covering the following areas:

- The overall humanitarian situation
- Economic conditions and employment
- Poverty and livelihood opportunities
- Food security and nutrition
- Housing conditions
- Access to basic services, including healthcare, education, water, sanitation and electricity.
